Using GEF projects as examples, a training course on the Art of Knowledge Exchange showed best practices, key procedures and tools behind successful knowledge exchange.

DAY 4 | Friday 17 March

GEF KNOWLEDGE DAY

Project: GEF SGP Eco-Social Products Project, Strategic BRA/15/01
During the GEF Knowledge Day, participants were able to learn about a Cooperative of Small Farmers from the Brazilian Savannah, the Cerrado Central Cooperative, and its role in supporting 30 producers to market their products. Secondly, the association APROSPERA displayed the market model of Community-supported Agriculture (CSA), aimed at structuring the relationship between producers and retailers in advance of production, so that producers are aware of market expectations and can plan ahead for production goals and mitigate shortages accordingly. Thirdly, the president of the Social Movement of Babassu Coconut Crackers (MIQCB), Lady Dijé, explained the historic struggle against major corporations acting in various parts of Central and Northern Brazil to maintain access to their traditional farming lands, in order to be able to harvest the babassu coconut, a key local resource for over 400,000 women. Fourthly, participants were able to learn more about the Cerrado biome, a threatened area of Savannah that covers a fourth of the country's territory, through an informative walking tour around the original vegetation park, including snacks prepared with many of the exquisite native ingredients. Navigating in small groups through different learning stations a variety of project beneficiaries discussed lessons learned, challenges faced throughout different project cycle phases, and potentialities for replication of practices across the region, including through international multi-stakeholder partnerships.

Participants were also provided with a Knowledge Passport which they used to answer questions and note results from each Learning Station. After interacting at the learning stations, participants had snacks with the community and participated in a debriefing session sharing what they had learned and experienced.
